In particular it examines the distribution of local authority powers in relation to the institutional structure of the university sector. A number of striking differences exist between the form of administrative control exercised by local authorities in public and private universities. Whereas municipal authorities have plenary powers over the universities in both types of institution, the extent of such control in Ireland's private universities is relatively small. In public universities the majority of institutions exercise a degree of 'independent' administrative control with powers limited to issues such as the provision of services, budget, health and safety regulation and property management. In contrast, the range of administrative powers exercised by the sector's private institutions is significantly wider and encompasses not only the provision of university services but also other activities such as research and the study of social issues. Local authorities in all sectors have the potential to exercise control over the conduct of academic research. In public universities the powers available to local authorities are more limited than those that exist in private universities. Most public 82157476af
